Gulf News reported that Petroleum Development Oman has set up a dedicated engineering and design office at its corporate headquarters at Mina Al Fahal that will specialize in front end engineering and design for major field development projects.

The new unit, to be called the FEED Office, has a team of 15 engineers, who will initially be working on the Mabrouk field development project.

Petroleum Development Oman is intended to undertake multiple field development projects to guarantee its long term oil and gas production capacity. FEED Office would ensure projects over the coming years advance without delay.
