
Iraqi government to build its biggest port in Basra

Sunday, 12 Apr, 2009

It is reported that Iraqi government approved building the country's biggest port in Basra, based on private investment mechanism. The project is considered one on Iraq's main strategic projects that could activate the country's economy and affect the region's economy.

Dr Ali Al Dabbagh a spokesman of the Iraqi government in a press release issued said that Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri Al-Maliki had referred the project of Al-Faw Port to a committee that was made responsible of putting proposals to fasten the execution of the project.

An Italian company will prepare designs and supervise the project's execution in coordination with the Iraqi Transport Ministry.

The ministry will determine the project's needs, including roads, electricity, water, railway and services, in coordination with other specialized ministries.

(Sourced from KUNA)

For more news visit at www.steelguru.com